

Hi,

I'm Alex. I'm building Kynlet — an early-stage concept for small software teams. I'm reaching out because I'd like to ask you a few questions. Not pitch you anything. Just ask.

What we're exploring

Kynlet shows what became wrong when a product decision changed.

Teams make pivots, scope cuts, pricing changes, and technical direction shifts all the time. The problem is that the downstream impact — rework, misalignment, broken assumptions — often surfaces weeks later and without a clear trace back to the original decision.

We believe this may be a real problem for teams at your stage. We do not yet have enough evidence to know if we are right.

Why I'm reaching out

We are speaking with technical founders and CTOs whose experience appears directly relevant to what we're trying to understand. That's the only reason you received this. There is no hidden agenda.

What the conversation actually is

30–45 min That's all we're asking for	No prep Nothing to read or review beforehand	No demo There's nothing to show you	No pitch I am not selling anything
---	--	---	--

I'll ask about your experience. You'll talk. I'll listen.

What we're trying to learn

- Is this actually a problem for teams like yours?
- Do existing tools and workflows already solve it adequately?
- Is it something teams would pay to reduce?

We are genuinely open to being wrong.

If you're willing to talk

Reply to this email and we'll find a time that works. No booking links. No forms. No calendar embeds.

aleksy@gitpushandpray.ai

Just a reply.